Not only has action research reached maturity, but in the context of the postmodern constructionist debates its scope has been dramatically expanded, its conceptual underpinnings deepened, and its forms of practice enormously enriched. A Writing Center Practitioner's Inquiry Into Collaboration May 11 2021 This book presents a model of Practitioner Inquiry (PI) as a systematic form of empirical research and provides a rationale for its suitability within a writing center context. Exploring the potential of writing centers as pedagogical sites that support research, the book offers an accessible model that guides both research and practice for writing center practitioners, while offering flexibility to account for their distinct contexts of practice. Responding to the increasing call in the field to produce empirical "RAD" (replicable, aggregable, data-driven) research, the author explores Practitioner Inquiry through explication of methodology and methods, a revisit of collaboration to guide both practice and research, and examples of application of the model. Nordstrom grounds this research and scholarship in Hawai'i's context and explores Indigenous concepts and approaches to inform an ethical collaborative practice. Adult Education as Theory, Practice and Research Dec 18 2021 The authors argue that the aim of research should be to improve practice through a process of critical reflection. Focusing clearly on the everyday concerns and problems of practitioners, they emphasize the importance of practical knowledge. Their definition of 'practice' is wide, and includes the generation of theory and the doing of research as well as front-line teaching. They show how notions of 'adult learning' and 'the adult learner' have been constituted mainly through theory and research in psychology and sociology, and examine action research as a mode of understanding. They conclude by looking at the curriculum implications for the teaching of adult education as reflective practice.

Developmental Work Research Oct 24 2019 "Developmental work research is an innovative approach to the study and reshaping of work and learning. It expands cultural-historical activity theory by bringing it to the domains of work, technology and organizations. The world of work is in turmoil, increasingly dominated by 'runaway objects' generated by globalization and greed (global markets are such massive objects out of control). Yet it is the object that motivates work and generates visions of better future. The use values of objects have not vanished, although they are more difficult to grasp than perhaps ever before. Developmental work research rediscovers and expands use values in runaway objects. In workplace interventions it engages practitioners in expansive re-forging of the objects of their work."—Cover.

Feminist Research In Theory And Practice Apr 10 2021 "This is a clear and accessible exploration of feminist method, methodology and epistemology. After situating herself and her work, Gayle Letherby charts the debates concerned with the epistemological, political and practical issues involved in doing feminist research, and places the debates within a wider consideration of the status of knowledge. The main focus of the book is then the particular and practical issues for feminist researchers. It examines how the process of research affects the results of that research and explores the relation between politics and practice in terms of research and knowledge production. Throughout the book there is a practical emphasis on specific examples of feminist research in action and, as well as summarizing current theoretical debates, Gayle Letherby adds to them." -- Back cover.

Research in Public Administration Apr 29 2020 Published in association with the American Society for Public Administration Research in Public Administration offers a comprehensive view of research in the field of public administration. Published in association with the American Society for Public Administration, this volume combines the contributions of distinguished figures in public administration. Jay D. White and Guy B. Adams gathered this compelling collection of articles with the aspiration that this volume will generate the critical mass necessary to advance the discourse and dialogue about appropriate methods, standards, and epistemologies for research in the field. The rationality of scientific knowledge is predicated on practical discourse, discussion, debate, deliberation, and argumentation over what is true or false, good or bad, right or wrong, and what should be desired. The authors' common concern for improving academic research and professional practice resulted in this collection of essays between the covers of one outstanding volume. This book will be of considerable interest to all students, researchers, scholars and professionals in public administration and related fields. "The subject of this book—research—not only probes the basics of the field, it crucially defines them, often in rugged struggles. The articles that follow in this book provide more detached and graphically complete histories and commentaries than this prefatory sketch allows. These studies support one common conclusion: in the field of public affairs and administration, methodologies and understandings of and about them—by researchers and users alike—make enormous differences in knowledge and what is done with it." --from the Foreword by Chester A.

Newland "If as some administrative scholars say, we live in a 'rebounding era,' then surely Professors Jay D. White and Guy B. Adams in Research in Public Administration have done a genuine service by helping to clarify the main lines of debate and controversy today in public administration research. Here scholars and doctoral students alike will find a rich intellectual feast that I believe may well stimulate our field to move beyond the old-fashioned—dead?—positivist paradigm, and create something new." --Richard Stillman, University of Colorado, Denver "Throughout the history of public administration in this country, scholars and practitioners have debated questions about the nature of research in the field. That debate has been particularly intense in the last decade or so, as challenges to the positivist domination of the field have been raised and as we have continued to struggle with concerns for theory versus practice. This collection brings together the best contributions to the recent debate and thus constitutes a superb compendium of materials attesting to the appropriate diversity of research perspectives in public administration. Research in Public Administration should be required reading." --Robert B. Denhardt, University of Central Florida "White and Adams bring together major contributions to a recent, very important debate over the adequacy of research in public administration and over the best ways of improving that research. Together with their analytical commentary, their compilation of these materials provides a valuable resource for scholars, students, and thoughtful practitioners in our field. Among other uses, this book will become standard reading in our doctoral seminars." --Hal Rainey, University of Georgia "Academicians and practitioners in any field of inquiry must pause periodically for some serious epistemological introspection, or what one contributor to this new book calls self-conscious' exploration of the fields bellybutton.' Research in Public Administration is precisely such an endeavour, offering varied judgments on the quality of American research and also exhorting the country's research community to engage in more meaningful debate of the appropriateness of alternative methodological approaches. . . . This book should be useful to those developing similar research programs in the broader international community." --Local Government Studies

The Business of Research Dec 06 2020 Architectural research is being redefined in practice. Whereas once the value of a piece of research was solely measured by the number of citations it received by fellow academics, shifting funding models and new societal concerns are forcing academia to question its structure and this mode of evaluation. At the same time a wave of practitioners and new types of institutions, such as RMIT in Melbourne and the London School of Architecture (LSA), have been recasting architectural education and theoretical speculation within practice, turning the traditional architectural studio into a learning environment that adopts and adapts academic models, and starts to use architectural research as a potential source of business intelligence, as a means for self-generating future commissions and speculative opportunities that sometimes even shift the terrain of practice. This new focus on research in practice is indicative of a profession redefining its relevance and scope. This is destabilising the traditional roles of academia and practice by questioning their deep-rooted separation and demanding a new definition of the term 'research' with one that is relevant to both parties. This issue features contributions from architectural thinkers, researchers and a number of practitioners who are recasting academic speculation within their own studios. This not only redefines what is meant by research and what forms it takes, but also how it creates value for them, their clients, for the discipline as a whole and for the ultimate users of their designs. This helps us to understand how research might be deemed valuable beyond a purely academic context. Moreover, it raises significant questions in terms of opportunities and risks that arise when research is recast into the less regimented realm of practice. Contributors: Daniel Davis, Lionel Devlieger, David Green, Harriet Harris, Rory Hyde, Lara Kinneir, James Soane, Ziona Strelitz, Leon van Schaik, John Zhang Featured architects: Assemblé, DSDHA, Foster + Partners, Iredale Pedersen Hook, OMA, Public Practice and Superflux.

Information Systems Research Mar 29 2020 Information Systems Research: Relevant Theory and Informed Practice comprises the edited proceedings of the WG8.2 conference, "Relevant Theory and Informed Practice: Looking Forward from a 20-Year Perspective on IS Research," which was sponsored by IFIP and held in Manchester, England, in July 2004. The conference attracted a record number of high-quality manuscripts, all of which were subjected to a rigorous reviewing process in which four to eight track chairs, associate editors, and reviewers thoughtfully scrutinized papers by the highly regarded as well as the newcomers. No person or idea was considered sacrosanct and no paper made it through this process unscathed. All authors were asked to revise the accepted papers, some more than once; thus, good papers got better. With only 29 percent of the papers accepted, these proceedings are significantly more selective than is typical of many conference proceedings. This volume is organized in 7 sections, with 33 full research papers providing panoramic views and reflections on the Information Systems (IS) discipline followed by papers featuring critical interpretive studies, action research, theoretical perspectives on IS research, and the methods and politics of IS development. Also included are 6 panel descriptions and a new category of "bright idea" position papers, 11 in all, wherein main points are summarized in a pithy and provocative fashion.

Doing Practice-based Research in Therapy Jul 25 2022 Learning how to use critical self-reflection creatively when practising therapy is an important component of training. This level of self-awareness is, however, often neglected in research, despite the centrality of the researcher to their work. Doing Practice-based Research in Therapy: A Reflexive Approach makes the vital link between practical research skills and self-awareness, critical reflection and personal development in practice-based research. Starting with a clear introduction to the theory, practice and debates surrounding this type of research, the book then guides the reader step-by-step through the practicalities of the research process, encouraging them to reflect upon and evaluate their practice at each stage. The book: - incorporates case studies throughout to illustrate different methodological approaches - uses real life examples from students conducting practice-based psychotherapy research - includes exercises, chapter objectives, end-of-chapter questions and suggestions for further reading to help consolidate learning - encourages ongoing personal development by introducing personal development planning (PDP) and lifelong learning in the field of research. By demystifying the reflexive approach, this highly practical guide ensures that trainees and qualified therapists get the most, both professionally and personally, from their practice-based research.
