British & American Child Welfare Services Oct 23 2019 There are weaknesses in child welfare administration on both sides of the Atlantic. Dr. Kammerer does not hesitate to point them out. Although she finds much to admire in British administration, she is one of the few Americans to speak critically of the British programs, and the confusion over what constitutes professional preparation for child welfare services. The author also discusses American imperfections. She shows that these imperfections make the Federal Children's Bureau (in contrast to the British Children's Department) powerless to enforce standards. She accuses specific offenders in America for their use of children's institutions for political spoils. She examines the serious anomalies existing among the states' financial support for child welfare services of the subprofessional public assistance programs, when these programs are "integrated" in state or local departments of welfare. This analysis of child welfare administration is a pioneer study. It indicates a possible way of making critical inquiry into the organization of social services for children. THIS IS AN IMPORTANT BOOK because it is the first: * To make a comparative study of child welfare services in the two major English-speaking nations of the world . * To provide a factual basis for organizational theory for child welfare administration. * To take issue with the theory behind existing forms of child welfare organizations not grounded upon the facts of program and the changing goals in the field of social work . * To furnish a way of analyzing the organization of other often so-called treatment fields such as mental health, training, and care of the handicapped, etc. Dr. Kammerer concludes that we must take advantage of professional thinking in the field of social work to see that children who need it, receive care in infancy to avoid their becoming public charges in later life. The author, a student of American public administration, includes many facts unknown to many, e.g., one of the wealthiest states in the union-Ohio did not appropriate one cent of state money for child welfare services until 1959.
